See the video below for more information. Today, we were given the opportunity to show you “HyperMotion Technology,” which was introduced in FIFA 22 for PlayStation 4. The full dynamic 3D powered by motion capture technology creates more realistic interactions on the pitch, and in the game, and to see how the system works, we wanted to invite you to a unique event where we brought together 22 real-life football players.

Collecting data from these players during a match in motion capture suits, we were able to track their every move, and from this, we could collect and analyse data throughout the match to create a new and unique scoring experience. These real-life data were then taken into the game and used to power the new “HyperMotion” gameplay. Just like real players on the pitch, the new player animations and behaviours would feel more natural and appropriate when they are in motion. The result is that even in virtual gameplay, the new “HyperMotion” looks so realistic that when a player ran over a virtual player to score a great goal, it felt like it would actually look like a real player running over a player in real life. And, as with real-life players, if we wanted to see an animation that was entirely realistic, we could use it to help teach or train players, or even make our own custom player animation. The result is that the new “HyperMotion” gives players more control over the game, and more control over their game. It’s also great for getting a football match started, too! If you watch the video above you’ll see that we were able to get this match started fairly quickly. Players can also use it in training, with the game fully dynamic, all from a live-streamed broadcast. How does the new “HyperMotion” play on PlayStation 4? Now, let’s take a look at the gameplay and how the new “HyperMotion” impacts the way that players play. Offensive “HyperMotion” In real-life, players are constantly off balance and out of position, and at full speed there’s only a short period of time to balance out, pivot and get back into position, and that’s where the new “HyperMotion” comes into play.

EA SPORTS FIFA 22 EA SPORTS FIFA 22 presents players with all new ways to score. A fundamentally innovative control system unlocks the new potential of the new gameplay engine. FIFA 22 includes a new attacking and defending model that delivers even more authentic player behaviour, and the all-new Blastmeter, which adapts to every player's physical and technical abilities. Players will be able to master new tactical formations, with an enhanced offside system that sets the stage for new ways to score. In addition to the new ways to score, EA SPORTS FIFA 22 delivers a new style of play by providing more opportunities to score with powerful finishing as well as more control over the match. New defensive maneuvers also open up opportunities for attack, while the player-controlled tactics and metagame of FIFA Soccer 22 reward intelligent, tactical play with real-life rewards. Gameplay Bearing the likeness of the real players, FIFA 22 adds a variety of new balls to the field, expanding the options available to play. Tactical changes, such as a potential offside, changing lines and an expanded passing window mean players will have even more control and opportunities to make plays. A new paced passing system rewards players for making intelligent passes and reducing the reliance on instinct. Improved AI opponents are more intelligent and aware of the game, making them more difficult to play against. They will use more "spy" players, more effectively communicate with their teammates, and adapt their tactics based on their playing position. Tactical Intelligence Play your opponents' game, take the game to them. FIFA 22 offers players more options than ever before to adjust their game, and to create their own tactics against their opponents. The offside system creates more opportunities for players to score, while new Tactical Intelligence and Offside Opportunities tools make use of these opportunities. Ball Possession Possess the ball and dictate play from any position on the pitch. Your ability to secure and create the ball will make the difference in how the match plays out. Ten new balls at different sizes are featured in the game, so players will have more options to play with the ball, and more ways to use it. New Tactics Engage in more intelligent football where you can control the tactics, formations and metagame. By rotating your formation, changing your tactics, or making adjustments to your formation, you can play smarter and more strategically. Offside Meter
